MRS. SALLADE'S FIGHT CASERIO'S MOTHER APPEALS.

She Doesn't Mean to Be Fooled by the Police.

Refused a Proposition Made by Schmittberger's Detective.

And She Means to Have Certain Persons Indicted.

Mrs. Mary Sallade, the woman Park nurst, who is determined to make Twenty-fourth street, between Broadway and Sixth avenue, thoroughly respectable, is rejoicing to-day because of the fact that she has triumphed over her respectable neighbors, who had advised her not to get mixed up in anything bordering on the sensational. They had told her she would be annoyed by away, that the police would harass her

In referring to other neighbors still a raid to support her, Mrs. Sallade incidentally gave her opinion of all the cowardly people of New York, as she termed them, who allow themselves to be annoyed because of fear of publicity if they she gave her head an angry toss and in slow tones exclaimed:

"They are cowards."

An hour's conversation could not have more thoroughly revealed the true nature of the woman's character. She believes she is simply fighting for her rights, and whether the public sneers at or supports ben, the police help or harass, she will fight until the block on which she lives is fit for the homes of most respectable households.

But Mrs. Sallade does not regard the undertaking as extremely difficult. She knows as much of law as some lawyers, and this morning announced that the owners of houses used for improper purposes will be indicted.

The trading, as usual, outside of a few shares, was limited. The fact that prices came better from London had a tendency to impart firmness to the market on this side.

The lawyer laughed, but stopped when Justice Grady called for the Sergeant.

"Ring up an ambulance and go to 101 Varick street," he said, "and bring that man here without fail. Take him out of bed if he is in it. Get him here his client was out of bed if he is in it. Get him here any way."

Hefore the Sergeant departed Lawyer Philips pleaded that as his client was out en bail he could not be dragged to court in that manner.

"He will not be out on bail when we get him now." was the retort. His bondsman has surrendered him, or rather, he will to-day.

This staggered the lawyer, who hurried out.

At 7 o'clock this morning Mrs. Evans was, busy preparing breakfast, and her uncle was sitting at a table in the kitchen drinking a bottle of sods-water. Evans, who had been hanging about the neighborhood late last night, gained entrance to the rear part of the house by an alley which runs off Twelfth street. As soon as he entered the kitchen doer he began firing at Hecht and his wife. The first shot fired struck Hecht behind the left car, killing him instantly.

Evans then fired another shot at he prostrate man, after which he turned the revolver on his wife. The turned woman started from the house, and as she rushed past her crased husband he sent a bullet into her neck. The woman dropped to the floor, and as she lay there Evans fired two more shots at her. Both of these shots went wide of the mark. Evans then went to the middle room on the second story and placing the revolver to his left breast earn bullet through his heart. So close had the sevolver beest held to his breast that his clothing was burning when he was found by a policeman.

Hecht and Evans were each twentynine year old, and Mrs. Evans had, always been insanely jealous of his wife, and had threatened to kill both her and Hecht on several occasions. Hecht was afraid of Evans, and always slept with a big baseball but at the head of his bed, in order to be prepared for a sudden attack.
